During the last century technological change, political turmoil, and above all the globalization of businesses have been difficult experiences for traditional and new family firms. Traditionally endurance and transformation of large family firms have been studied through isolated case studies at the national or regional level, which have provided a wealth of empirical evidence.

However, there have been internal and external changes that have affected in a similar way large firms across the planet which have very rarely been analyzed in a comparative way. Among the most outstanding changes one should note the professionalization of management, the incorporation of women as C.E.O.s of the firms, the creation of new financial tools like family offices and special investment tools within or outside the stock market, the creation of new educational institutions at a global scale, the internationalization of businesses, and the promotion of global networks of information and knowledge exchange. Information costs and conflict resolution within and outside large family firms have thus changed in scale and scope in a process that is peculiar and different when compared to non family firms.

The analysis of this process of change and transformation has received quite a lot of attention by leading consultants in family firms in the US and Europe, and business historians, though they have often worked in separate scientific spheres. This workshop is one of the first opportunities to establish an interdisciplinary dialogue among these scholars, whose main objective is to promote cross fertilization of concepts and ideas in order to reach a better understanding of complex long-term processes of adaptation and survival of large family firms in different parts of the world. Debates will also help design a potential book to be edited by an international publisher.
