

Afrasian Cognates to orphan Akkadian words, or why Madame Assyriologie should not stand aloof
from her less thorough-bred African cousins

Alexander Militarev - Russian State University for the Humanities, Moscow (Russia)

Obviously, the earlier any given language, or language group, branched off the rest of the family it belongs to, the higher is the number of its separate isoglosses with distantly related languages, Akkadian being no exception (the only conspicuous exception is Arabic sharing maximum lexical isoglosses with any other Semitic or Afrasian language due to its –still enigmatically– enormous lexicon).

That such retentions may in principle if sporadically occur even in only one language of a tight group can be well illustrated by the case of Mandaic zma ‘blood’ representing the main term for ‘blood’ in this language, with dma id. (from the common Sem. dam-* from Afras. dam-* ‘blood’) being much less common. Naturally, a common opinion is that these are two doublets undoubtedly of the same origin, with zma subjected to some irregular and unique phonetic change. Not unquestionable parallels to Mnd. zma in Arab. zaʕama ‘presser une plaie de manière que le pus en sorte, le sang se dessèche et forme une croûte’ (BK 1 967) and Gez. zam ‘blood’ (in LGz 638 with zom, zomo ‘broth; impurity left in broth by boiled meat’ from Greek zōmos ‘soup, sauce, broth’) hardly suffice to disprove this opinion (cf. SED I, No. 293). For the decisive argument for a separate Afrasian root zam(?)*- ‘blood’ retained in Mnd. (and, less reliably, in Arab. and Gez.) cf. the following forms: W. Chad.: Geruma žàamà, Sha, Kulere zòm ‘blood’, perhaps C. Chad.: Daba žèmi ‘vein, tendon, root’ (pertinent only if ‘vein’ is the primary meaning) and S. Omot.: Dime z/zumu ‘blood taken from an ox’, Ari zomʔi, zom, Hamar zumʔu ‘blood’.

An established position of Akkadian as a first branch to come off the Proto-Semitic node in the Afrasian genealogical tree has been questioned in several publications by the author who hypothesizes the separation of Proto-Modern South Arabian –then to be labelled Proto-South Semitic– should have preceded the separation of Proto-Akkadian (or, perhaps, Proto-Akkado-Eblaïtic). Anyway, it is no wonder that Akkadian, an early offshoot of Semitic, would retain a significant number of common Afrasian features, lost in the main stock of Semitic, or the Proto-North-West Semitic (v. Afrasian genealogical tree. Including Semitic, enclosed).

A list of separate Akkadian-Afrasian cognates to follow is far from complete. The author’s main aim was to demonstrate the plausibility of the phenomenon stimulating further research. Besides, it is my response to a kind of bias, or mistrust heard from a number of colleagues. I have never witnessed it to be publicly expressed–either in scholarly publications or in conference presentations, but heard it more than once in private friendly discussions. This mutual mistrust comes from two opposite “camps” in the field of Afrasian studies, one representing students of “classical” Semitic languages and Egyptologists, the other, specialists in living African Afrasian or Modern South Arabian languages. Worded in various ways, the claim can be reduced to a question: “How can one compare on a par, –the “classics” would ask,– our ancient languages, with their venerable written monuments, fixed literary norm and developed means of expression, to those fugitive normless idioms full of dialectal and whatnot other if arbitrary variations?" "How can you compare on a par, –echoed the field linguists,– the living speech I've heard so many times and have a precise high tech record of, to those reliquiae of dead languages with their often arbitrarily interpreted texts, some written in symbols rather hiding than revealing the phonation of real speech?" In the present paper, I have tried to show how evidence from both sources, literary extinguished languages and unalphabetic living ones, whatever incomplete and imperfect each of these sources might be in its own way, can complement each other, the very fact of regularity in phonetic correspondences and coincidence or affinity in meaning being an arbiter confirming the authenticity of data compared.

* My work on the present contribution was carried out in the framework of the project 06-04-00397a supported by RFH/ΠΓΗΦ. I am grateful to this foundation for its financial help. My gratitude goes to Dr. S. Loesov who carefully read a draft version of this article and provided valuable critical remarks.

The examples having no references to a lexicographic source are taken from the Afrasian database compiled within the "Evolution of Human Languages" project, supported by the Santa Fe Institute.

Examples follow in the Latin alphabetic order (as for specific Semitic consonants, h is placed after g; k, after k; š and š, after s).

1. Akk. abullu 'door, gate' (similar Hbr. and Aram. forms are considered Akkadisms) // Afras. (?a-)bVl-* 'door': W. Chad. HVbil-* 'door': Sayanchi ḥil, Burma ḥál, etc.; C. Cush.: Khamir bila 'door', Qwara bela 'window, hole'; E. Cush.: LEC: Oromo balbala 'door'.

7. Akk. damdammu (damdāmu, daddāmu) 'a mule' // Afras. dam(Vr)-* 'kind of equid': (?) Berb.: Zenaga damma 'mehari camel' (the isolated Zenaga term makes this comparison doubtful, though as for the meaning difference, it should be noted that there are several similar Afras. terms combining an equid and a camel; I can imagine no other common feature responsible for this association, but their common function as a pack-animal as early as on the Proto-Afras. level); (?) C. Chad.: Buduma démde 'colt, foal', (?) E. Chad.: Kera gàdàamò 'horse' (if < gV-dVm-*); E. Cush.: Afar daami 'zebra', LEC: Somali dàmèer 'male donkey', Baiso demer 'ass'. Cf. 9. Akk. daššu (taššu) ‘buck (said of gazelles and goats)’, traditionally related to Sem. tayš-* ‘he-goat’ // Afras. days-* (otherwise dayĉ- or daysĥ-*; reflexes of these three sibilants either merged as in Akk. or not yet specified as in Beja and Omot.) ‘(buck of) gazelle or goat’: N. Cush.: Beja deēš ‘young gazelle’; N. Omot.: Wolayta, Gamo, Kullo dešša, Basketo deyšše, Haruro deyše, etc. ‘goat’. [] Cf. SED II No. 231, with a discussion on less reliable Semitic parallels to the Akk. term; cf. also Bl. Beja Fauna, 8-9, relating Beja, Omotic and Akk. (as well as Sem. tayš-*, which is rather a different root).

10. Akk. erû, werû ‘copper’ // C. Chad.: Mandara ɔ̀rè, Malgwa ĩra, Mada ará, E. Chad.: Jegu ɔ̀árro ‘iron’.

Eg. ḍr ‘fire’ Gr. (related, if < gir-*); W. Chad.: Hausa gúura ‘make fire’ (cf. Dera gárgàt, Maha girgir, C. Chad.: Tera gìrgìr, Bura girgir ‘hot’ belonging here or to No. 13); E. Cush.: Saho, Afar gira ‘fire’, HEC: Sidamo, Hadiya giira ‘fire’, giir- ‘burn’, Darasa, Kambatta giira ‘fire’.

13. Akk. gurāru ‘hot ash’ // Afras. g^wa(ʔ)ir-* ‘ashes, embers’ (seems to be a separate root as early as on the Proto-Afras. level, though eventually related to No. 12): W. Chad.: Angas kur ‘ash’, Guruntum gwār-an ‘charcoal’, gàgár ‘soot’; S. Cush.: Alagwa, Burunge giʔiru (one wonders if Iraqw gilʔi belongs here) ‘embers’.

17. Akk. igāru ‘wall’ (usually considered a Sumerism; similar Aram. and Arab. forms must be Akkadisms; there are also Mod. Eth. terms reconstructable as g^war-* meaning ‘back of the house’, which, unless Cushitisms, are eventually related) // Afras. (ʔi-)g^war-*: Eg. ḍrw ‘part of house’ MK, ḍry ‘wall’, ḍry-t ‘dwelling’ Gr.; Berb. gVrur-* ‘enclosure, wall, yard’: Adghaq a-grur, Ahaggar a-gror, Qabyle agrur, Canarian ta-goror, etc.; W. Cush.: Dahalo luka ‘thigh’.

19. Akk. kibtu ‘wheat’ (likely related is Tgr. kābā ‘Getreidebrei’ LH, 411), certainly not a Sumerism as it is often claimed // Afras. kabb-, var. kib- ‘kind of cereal, wheat’: Eg. tʔbb ‘ear (of cereals) Gr.; Berb.: Ahaggar a-kəbbu ‘nucleus, stone (of fruit)’, Ayr, E. Tawllemed ekābb id., te-kəbbəkəb-t (redupl.) ‘ear of certain plants (wheat, etc.)’; W. Chad.: Bidiya karay ‘to make dry (cereals, land)’; E. Cush.: LEC: Oromo ḳorā ‘dry’ [] Mod. Aram. (Urmian) ḳayr- ‘dry’, quoted in one obscure source is hardly enough to propose a Sem. etymology for the Akk. term. The latter could be compared, with a meaning shift, to Sem. ḳʷirr-* ‘cold’ (Hbr. ḳōr, Arab. ku/irr-, Tgr. ḳʷärrir, etc.) if not for the above Afras. parallels with a full meaning coincidence; the ultimate connection between Afras. ḳʷarVy-* ‘dry’ and Sem. ḳʷirr-* ‘cold’ (< Afras., if E. Cush.: LEC: Oromo ḳorra and HEC: Sidamo ḳorre ‘cold’ are not Semitisms) is possible.

Chad.: Lame-Peve lo ‘okra’, E. Chad.: Birgit wèyál ‘seed’, Mokilko ʔulo ‘grain’, Bidiya, Dangla luw-, Migama lúwáw ‘to sow’; N. Cush. Beja óli ‘roasted wheat’, E. Cush.: Saho, Afar iláú ‘corn, wheat’, HEC: Burji álo ‘millet’, Dullay: Harso wolalla ‘sorghum’; N. Omot.: Koyra allo ‘millet’, S. Omot.: Ari, Hamer uula ‘maize, corn’.

27. Akk. ludū, an administrative designation of a field (probably a field, on which specific work obligations have to be performed); cf. Arab. lad-dat- ‘jardin couvert de verdure et de fleurs’ BK 2, 982 (semantically questionable) // < Afras. ludʔw/y-* ~ ladd-* ~ IVʔVd-* ‘plot of land (with a special status or designation)’; Eg. ʔd.t ‘k. of field, track of land’ MK, ʔdw-t ‘cattle pasture’ 19 Dyn. This study was carried out within the frames of the projects in comparative Semitic and Afrasian supported by the Russian Foundation for Sciences (Project 03-06-80435a), the Russian Foundation for the Humanities (Project 04-04-00324a), The Santa Fe Institute (The “Evolution of Human Languages” Project), and the Russian Jewish Congress (The “Tower of Babel” Project). My gratitude goes to these institutions as well as to Leonid Kogan, who consulted me about the Akkadian terms and Olga Stolbova whose Chadic database and comments I always recur to (some exceptional cases when I do not follow the recommendations of these learned colleagues are entirely my own responsibility).
